Professors share memorable exam excuses from students

By Karen Ingram
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's probably safe to say no one likes finals, including professors. After all, who wants to grade a hundred papers? One can always pray for an ice storm in December or a tornado in May to graciously cancel class, but rather than stick with wishful thinking, some students go to great extremes to try and weasel their way out of taking final exams.

Professors all over campus shared some of the most memorable excuses they've heard, though a good number of them said nothing came to mind because it was not an issue for them.

"During my years at K-State, I've found our students to be diligent and responsible about their work, including final examinations," said Jeff Katz, professor of management.

Others, however, were not so lucky – unless the amusement factor is taken into consideration.

Here are some of the most interesting responses from professors and instructors. (Bear in mind: professors read the Collegian too in case some of these excuses seem too good to pass up.)

"I mostly get 'my grandmother died.' I mean, I get a lot, lot of them, which makes me worry about the care of grannies in rest homes."
—Robert Schaeffer, professor of sociology, anthropology and social work

"Lots of grandmas and, on occasion, a parent 'dies.'"
—Aruna Michie, associate professor of political science

"I can't think as well on Thursdays as I can earlier in the week."
—Carol Russell, instructor of English

"My favorite, absolutely true excuse came by frantic phone call from my student's husband on a Thursday night: 'Cara asked me to call. We're at the hospital. The doctor says it's gonna be tonight.' This phone call was memorable because the very-soon-to-be father didn't mention what the doctor was talking about. He just blurted out the three sentences and hung up."
—Robin Mosher, instructor of English

"I had a friend in graduate school, who was an instructor, who actually forgot about the exam she was supposed to give."
—L. Susan Williams, associate professor of sociology, anthropology and social work

"A few years ago, at my former university, a student called the office to say that he could not make his Monday morning final exam because he went home over the weekend and was having car troubles. Our office has just installed caller ID, and the location of the call on the screen revealed that he was calling from a university dorm room. When challenged, the student replied, 'I'll be right there.'"

—Jeffrey Hornsby, professor of management

"A colleague of mine, many years ago, said a student explained to her that she missed the exam date because she had been picked up by the police for prostitution."
—Claire Dehon, professor of modern languages

"I have noticed that, statistically speaking, the frequency of grandmother deaths seems to increase on days leading up to and including test days. This is just an observation, and I haven't investigated it further."
—Jack Oviatt, professor of geology

"I regularly tell students that the only way that I will let them reschedule their finals is if they have died. I also tell them that to prove they are dead, they have to produce a toe tag with their name on it. One student sent me her toe tag. She said she would be resurrected in three days and available then to take the final. I figured anyone with that much creativity deserved a break."
—Joseph Aistrup, associate dean and professor in arts and sciences

Top 5 worst ways to study

We all know cramming is supposedly ineffective, but we do it anyway. Here are some study methods that will do you even less good than waiting until the last minute to even open the book.

5. DRUNK.
It's the night before your final and you think, "I'll just have one beer to relax and unwind." Well, one turns into nine, and the next thing you know, you wake up with vomit in your philosophy book. Fail.

4. AT A FRAT PARTY.
Your friends are finished with finals and decide to celebrate. You grab your notes and tag along thinking it can't be that loud at the party. It's pretty hard to study flashcards soaked in jungle juice. Fail.

3. WATCHING TELEVISION.
Those people on "Grey's Anatomy" sound so intelligent, you'll inevitably pick up some information for your biology final Friday by just watching the show, right? Friday morning comes and you can diagram the entire sexual history of the doctors at Seattle Grace Hospital, which is impressive, but you have no idea how to propagate a plant. Fail.

2. NAKED.
You and your girlfriend decide to play strip study and remove a piece of clothing whenever one gets an answer right. It's hot outside, and she was only wearing shorts and a tank top. Fail.

1. DURING THE FINAL ITSELF.
You decide to get in some last-minute study time during the final. Apparently your professor doesn't care that you haven't turned over your test yet, and he thinks openly reading the book during the test could be construed as cheating. Fail.

Best ways to study for final exams

- Study a small piece of the assignment at a time – Students can hold about seven or eight bits of information in our heads at any one time. So we need to learn a piece with just a few concepts or ideas, but study the piece well enough to understand it.
- Study aids – Use note cards, practice tests, tutors and teacher assistants as top study aids.
- Find a study buddy or study group – Pick out someone or a group of people in your class so you can team up and study by reviewing information or quizzing each other
- Review previous tests – Go over previous tests throughout the quarter. Spend most of your time learning what you got wrong. You should also take the time to get to know the format of the final so there are no opportunities for misunderstanding later
- Cramming – Many say “cramming” is not the way to go, as you lose this information fast. If you do cram, it is recommended to do it within 24 hours of your final, so the content is fresh in your head. Review all of your material at least once through to deal with any and all unread materials. You should ensure you understand all basic concepts before moving on to the next subject
- All-nighters – While it is good to try and maintain a “normal” sleeping schedule, this is almost impossible. Yes, you will be pulling a couple of all-nighters, and you will be fine (maybe just a little worn out after finals week). Just remember to take short breaks in between tasks to give your brain a refresher
- Caffeine – Perfect for the late night study sessions. Be sure to keep quantities of Red Bull, Mt. Dew and coffee on hand
- Collaborate notes – Compare class notes with peers to make sure you have all the needed information
- Pick a good study environment – You can accomplish much more quality study time in an academic-like atmosphere than studying at home. Cut out all distractions while brainstorming to help maintain your train of thought
- Choose a study time that best suits you – Some people have more energy in the daytime, therefore study harder then, while others have higher efficiency during the late hours of the night. Find what works best for you and dedicate your more difficult tasks to these study times.

Tips for making cram sessions successful

Reading the same sentence over again indicates the need for a break. Reading the same sentence over again indicates the need for a break.

Taking even a few minutes away from studying can help information retention by giving a revitalized approach to study material. Here are a few helpful study tips for the long week ahead.

READ A BOOK

While more reading might not seem the remedy for test stress, reading a fun novel can provide relief from an overload of facts, figures and statistics. Naomi Rockler-Gladen, professor of Colorado State University, suggests reading an engrossing but not too dense novel. Reading for fun can also be used as a motivational tool. After completing a review session let your mind relax a little with something it enjoys reading.

TAKE A WALK

Sitting in a rigid wooden chair and staring at a computer screen or book for hours warrants a bit of movement. Even a 10-minute walk can help refresh and rejuvenate the mind. Not only does exercise improve blood circulation, it also helps release pent up energy.

EAT A SNACK

The Purdue University Student Health Center suggests consuming protein over carbohydrates to keep energy on an even and stable level. This also means avoiding sugary snacks and candy bars in favor of high protein bars. Drinking plenty of water helps maintain energy without a rush and subsequent downslide.

PLAY LIKE A KID

The Chronicle for Higher Education reported in January 2005 that State University of New York

College at Oneonta gave students coloring books, play dough and crayons to relieve stress in a party themed “Return to Kindergarten.”

At Elizabethtown, College students were given bubble wrap and plastic hammers to release their frustration. This method of break is therapeutic because it doesn’t require much thought said Eileen S. Halter, assistant director of the Elizabethtown College health center.

Of course, there are also very ineffective ways to spend time away from studying.

Getting on Facebook, distracting friends focused on their work, eating too much food and consuming excessive caffeine are all ways to destroy effective working habits, according to www.zencollegelife.com.
